Senator Dolliver to Graduates of Washington College.

ANNUAL CLOSING EXERCISES

Tells Them They Know Little or Nothing Upon Leaving School and Have to Get Knowledge by Brushing Up Against World-Settle in Growing West.

Senator 'onathan P. Dolliver, of Iowa, last night addressed the graduates of the Washington College of Law and a large audience of their friends at their commeasurement exercises, held at the National Rifles Armory.

The class, which was the fourth to graduate from the school, was composed principally of ladies, who decided to adopt the legal profession as their life-

The ball was tastefully decorated, and the singe was banked high with palms and exquisite floral decorations. The assemblage comprised the relatives and friends of the graduates, and the ovations given each of the students as they walk-ed forward to receive their diplomas were most hearty and enthusiastic.

In his address Senator Dolliver highly complimented the class and expressed his hope and belief that its members would eventually attain prominence in their chosen profession. He strongly advocated the policy of young lawyers deserting the already overcrowded Eastern cities and establishing themselves in the growing West. He also voiced his own conviction that the day is fast approaching when women will have the opportunity to rise in all professions to an equal with men.

Senator Dolliver said in part: "It is a very great pleasure for me to have the opportunity to participate with you in these commencement exercises. "I have had considerable trouble in deciding what I ought to say to you. After I had consented to talk to you, the committee came timidly back to me and requested that I should not conduct my little speech according to the prevailing rules of the Senate and House.

Man With the Pencil.

"The profession of the law has become one of the most intellectually prominent professions in the world. It requires its followers to have great force and a fin command of the English language. Every time a lawyer rases to plead a case nowndays, there is the indispensable 'man with the pencil' right at his elbow, tak-ing down his words in black and white. Such conditions require the lawyer who would be successful to have his facts at his finger tips and present them clearly and forcibly, without fear of their being

"The study of law is not so much the preparation of great lawyers. The law Corporal O'Brien, formerly of a Massaschools in themselves are of little practi-cal value. If I had my way I would do away with most of the schools in favor of the actival practice in a law office. The schools, at best, do not make lawyers. They only give a faint inking of how a case ought to be conducted. After gradu-ation the embryo lawyer must rub up against the world and its stern realities. This will give him an understanding of what the great bustling world of today requires and bring with it a broadening taken not because of the credence given of the ideas and knowledge that has been to O'Brien's charge, but by reason of the

Tou can fill your heads check full of book learning and school room notions, book learning and school room notions, but by the time you've been out in the world six months you will have forgotten nearly everything you learned. When I was a boy I attended the little country school where I lived. Among other things I learned while there was a great mass of geography. We had an enormous geography book, and I mastered everything in it, from beginning to end. That was a great achievement in those parts, and I was duly proud of it. But I had not been out of that school three mouths before I had forgotten everything in that. before I had forgotten everything in that precious book, and was just about as ignorant as before

Vast Amount of Details.

"The trouble lay in the fact that w had been obliged to master a vast amount of details without knowing the fundamental principles. I had learned that a certain Oriental ruler had set up his capital at Damascus; but I had not learned why he did it, where Damascus was, o any of the main facts regarding the event

"But when the budding lawyer has received his sheepskin and stepped out into the world of realities," continued Sens tor Dolliver, "he plants himself in a little hole of an office in a great city, already far overcrowded with lawyers, just as soon as he can get his little sign struck off. Every year there are 5,600 or 6,000 men graduating from colleges of law throughout the country. With compara tively few exceptions, this vast army plants itself in the modern catacombs of small offices in great cities. Here they either dry up and slowly sink into total obscurity, or, like William McKinley, emerge with the experience and principles that will subsequently place them in the ranks of the country's great. "My advice to the embryo lawyer is to shun the large cities, where he will be passed by, and go out into the undeveloped towns, where he can familiarize himself with conditions and grow up with the country. Thousands of young people are sinking in the mire in hig cities every year who might easily succeed in less crowded parts of the country.

"And to you young ladies who have just completed your course in the study of law I offer my most sincere con-gratulations. You have done nobly, and I heartily wish you success. There is no reason in the world that I can see why you should not be successful in your work, as much so as the men. The time is rapidly coming when women will have a soleridid convertunity to show what a splendid opportunity to show what they can do. There is only one standard that amounts to anything in the world in my estimation, and that is the standard that counts the ability of men and wom-en as equal. Women are rapidly com-ing to the front in all conceivable pro-fessions and trades that a few years ago resions and trades that a tew years ago were considered the sole property of the sterner sex. Some of them even insist on taking a text. I am not one of the persons who object to this. I expect the time to come when they will have just as much right to preach the gospet and practice law as men.

Better Get Married, Young Women.

"But I must confess that I have somewhat old-fashioned ideas on this subject, and, while I believe the women can plead a case just as well as anyone else, my advice to them is to get married and settle down. I strongly advise the members of D. Kellogg, Chicago.

"To those of you who do not get mar ried every opportunity is open to achieve a brilliant career. Especially is this true here in the Capital of the nation. Not only is Washington the political Mecca. but it is rapidly becoming the equentional center as well. Every one of you young women has a future in your cho-sen profession if you will only blaze your way and show the world that you sre as competent to stand at the head of the legal profession as any man. This institution, in my opinion, will undoubtedly grow and prosper, and do a

DELIGHTFUL CONCERT BY MUSIC PUPILS

Program of Excellence Rendered at New Willard.

can't get a man and every man can't get | Many Happy Selections Interpreted With Delicate Finish and Musicianly Feeling.

> the most delightful concerts given here since last fall was that by the students of Mrs. H. H. Mills, in the ballroom of the New Willard last night.

Every sent in the attractive concert hall was occupied, and each number received spontaneous and hearty applause. It has been two years since Mrs. Mills presented her pupils in a recital, and those who have artistic worth of her concerts were present last night, and the occasion was altogether a happy one. Throughout the audience could be distinguished many of Mrs. Mills' pupils of several years ago, and a feeling of congeniality seemed to permeate the atmosphere. Each one of the soloists was presented by friends with beautiful floral offerings, and Mrs. Mills' ingenuity once again asserted itself in that place of the omnipresent usher whose duty it usually is to present these tokens of esteem to the artists on the program. Several attractive young girls officiated in that Program Very Strong.

The program was an exceedingly strong one and was chosen from a wide field. The ever beautiful compositions of Schumann figured conspicuously while the characteristic work of Liza Lehman were among the most entertaining in the long list of songs

From the many writers at the demand of singers the songs presented last night seemed to have been the most happy selections which could have been made and each was interpreted with such delicate finish and musicianly feeling that the entire program proved thoroughly enter-the program who are entitled to words of praise. When one is invited to hear a number of so-called vocal students sing does not look for a great degree of real merit in their work, but the concert last night was as little like a students' recttal as one could imagine. With few exceptions the singers gare splendid ac-counts of themselves and their teacher and the affair was more like a profes-

Miss Halley's Good Work.

One of the most pleasing numbers of the evening was Miss Lillian Halley's beautiful rendition of Liza Lehman's "I Sent My Soul to the Invisible" from "The Persian Garden." Miss Eleanor Simonds gave two solos, Lalo's "L'Esclave" and "Der Doppleganger," by Schubert, in the same careful

Others on the program who made favorable impressions were Miss Carrie Burkhardt who, in addition to two other Goddard, Mrs. D. Olin Leech, Mr. Alfred B. Leet, Miss Emily S. R. Glover, Mr. William Mooney, Miss Mattle Gibson, Mr. S. P. Thompson, Mrs. William Keye Miller, Miss Edna Baier, Mrs. Adele Jack-son, of New York; Miss Artz, Mrs. N. G. Kelser, Mrs. Thomas W. Brahany, and Mrs. Charles F. Remmel. Mr. Harry Wheaton Howard, Miss Jen-nie Glennan, and Miss Alma Ebert rendered valuable assistance at the piano and Mr. Arthur F. Trost, violinist, a re-cent addition to the musical circle at the Capital, offered a violin obligate.
